Hydrolysis of D-galactose to L-arabinose by wild-type Lactococcus lactis in a high-density lipase cell-free system. Lactococcus lactis is a potential probiotic bacterium which has many nutritional advantages over other probiotic microbes. Lactococcus lactis is able to hydrolyse lactose to l-Ara, lactulose, and lactose-derived oligosaccharides. The aims of this study were to identify and characterize the enzymes of L. lactis responsible for the hydrolysis of lactose, lactulose and lactose-derived oligosaccharides and to use the cell-free supernatant to develop a cell-free l-Ara recovery system. Cells of L. lactis NZ9000 were incubated with 25 mM lactose and cell-free supernatant was used for isolating five cell-bound lipolytic enzymes, LLA, LAC, LAL, LBC, LLL. The properties of these enzymes were determined. Cell-free supernatant was also used in the development of a high-density L-Ara recovery system. The results showed that L. lactis produced a unique set of enzymes (LLA, LBC, LAL) that hydrolysed lactose to l-Ara. The high-density l-Ara recovery system was investigated for its efficiency at two lactose concentrations (12.5 and 25 mM) and two enzyme concentrations (200 and 350 units/mL) in milk-substrate mixtures and whole milk. The recovery of L-arabinose from milk was significantly higher (P

A circularly polarized luminescent phosphor based on the co-doped Ce²⁺ and Tb³⁺ ions. A circularly polarized luminescence (CPL) phosphor with excellent temperature stability, which contains the co-doped Ce(2+)/Tb(3+) ions in Sm(2)O(2)S, was obtained for the first time. The CPL emission is emitted from the lowest excited 4F_{7/2} state of Tb(3+) through the (4)G_{5/2} state, and it is attributed to a combination of a (4)T_{5/2} transition and a (4)F_{5/2} transition of Ce(2+) ions. The CPL excitation shows two peaks at 293 nm and 317 nm, which are ascribed to the (4)F_{7/2} state and (4)F_{5/2} state of Ce(2+) ions, respectively. The CPL intensity ratio of the (4)F_{5/2} transition of Ce(2+) ions to the (4)T_{5/2} transition of Tb(3+) ions is about 5.2. The temperature-dependent CPL spectrum indicates that the luminescence is stable and the excited energy transfers from Tb(3+) ions to Ce(2+) ions at elevated temperatures. The resulting CPL color-tunable phosphor with a broad CPL emission band would find potential applications in thermo-optical displays and security labels.

where to sell appliances in houston texas I had gotten a quote of over $800 off a new fridge and freezer. I was told that I can save that money by selling my old fridge and freezer, but there is a high risk factor because these appliances are older and could break and be dangerous. If I had the money to go buy new appliances I would have done that, but that is not the case. I have a brand new Kenmore washer and dryer in my basement. I get a chance to sell my appliances, but need to know where to take them. I am a little concerned because the appliances are pretty old and the company states I could lose money. Where to in Houston Texas
